

Shifting Perspectives brings together the work of a group of photographers, all of whom have children or a relative with Down's syndrome or Down's syndrome themselves. The goal of Shifting Perspectives has always been to demonstrate that people with Down's syndrome can and do lead rewarding and semi-independent lives through vibrant, thought provoking images. To ensure that the photographs continue to challenge attitudes and prejudices about people with the condition, each year Shifting Perspectives focuses on breaking down a different stereotype from race and religion to life opportunities.

This groundbreaking exhibition since 2005 has been changing the perceptions of people with Down's syndrome and through the generous support of GlaxoSmithKline will continue to travel across the globe to raise awareness until 2013.
